Yielding the Floor: Tips and Techniques for Student-Centered Teaching

By Lindsay Herron

Paulo Freire once lamented that in the traditional “banking” model of education, the teacher is perceived as the sole possessor of knowledge in the classroom. His job is “to ‘fill’ the students with the contents of his narration” (Freire, 1993), as if they were empty vessels. This isn’t true, however; students come to the class filled with their own experiences, background knowledge, interests, abilities, and beliefs.

Student-centered teaching rejects the traditional model of education in favor of an approach that respects and integrates the knowledge students bring to the classroom. It shifts the teacher from the center of the classroom to the periphery, making him less a “sage on the stage” than a “guide by the side.” Some teachers believe that a student-centered approach can’t be instituted in Korea; that because of the demands of the national curriculum and washback from the university entrance exam, a traditional, teacher-centered class is the most efficient way to dispense knowledge. In this workshop, however, we’ll discuss simple ways to make classes student-centered—without sacrificing exam preparations.

David Paul’s (2004) model of child-centered learning offers an excellent starting place for this. His model includes five steps: notice, want, challenge/take risks, play/experiment, succeed, and link. Teachers, he says, should give students space to notice new words or patterns, and give them a reason to want to know the meaning. After students’ interest is piqued, they can make guesses about the pattern, practice using it, learn from their mistakes, and finally begin to use the pattern creatively in myriad situations. The pattern ultimately finds a place in their mental model of English.

Teachers can use this model as a framework for making lessons more student-centered. A few simple adjustments to one’s teaching approach can make a world of difference!

THE PRESENTER

Lindsay Herron has been a visiting professor at Gwangju Natl. University of Education in Gwangju since 2008. Prior to that, she taught English on a Fulbright grant at Seogwipo High School in Jeju-do. ## Utilizing Principles of The Montessori Method in the ESL Classroom

By Seneca Ryan

Dr. Maria Montessori was one of the most widely known educational innovators of the early 20th century. Though the majority of her theories and methods have been confirmed by modern research, they go largely unused in schools and remain revolutionary even by today's standards. In this presentation, we will be discussing the Montessori system of education and specifically two of the fundamental theories, movement and independence, which are central to all Montessori classrooms. We will explore how we can adopt these concepts in our ESL classes and look at a sample lesson, which incorporates both concepts. Though these practices can be used with any age group, we will be focusing mainly on young learners. Participants will come away with an introduction to The Montessori Method and ideas with which to better meet the needs of their students.

THE PRESENTER

Seneca Ryan has been teaching at Chonnam National University in Gwangju since 2012. She received her MA in Education in 2008 with an emphasis in the Montessori pedagogy and continues her research in the history of education and international educational policy and reform. Prior to coming to Korea, she lived and taught in Mexico, Germany, and the USA.

KOTESOL: Classroom Observation, Branded Items

KOTESOL branded merchandise is now available for ordering online! Lapel pins in silver and gold are available for 3,000 won each, ceramic mugs for 3,000 won, and travel mugs for 5,000 won. Additional items will debut at the National Conference and will be available online shortly afterwards. KOTESOL members get free domestic shipping; order your KOTESOL branded item today!

KOTESOL members will also soon have access to our new Open Door Classroom Observation Program! Throughout 2014, the Membership Committee will facilitate connections between members who wish to observe classes and members who are willing to let themselves be observed. Starting this month, we're seeking experienced teachers who would like to join our database of potential hosts. For more information or to volunteer, please go to <http://koreatesol.org>.

Are you giving a presentation at a non-KOTESOL event? Would you like to give some KOTESOL goodies to your audience members? Just send us the details of your presentation (what, where, when, how many attendees), and we'll send you some free KOTESOL pens to hand out! You can request these free promotional pens on the KOTESOL website.

Reflective Practice Special Interest Group Meets

Thomas Farrell tells us that Reflective Practice is not a method, but "a way of life" for language teaching professionals like us. It involves systematically examining our beliefs about teaching and learning and what we do in the classroom. There are many ways to reflect: participating in classroom observations, keeping a teaching journal, compiling a teaching portfolio, and engaging in group discussions, among others. Our chapter now has our own special interest discussion group. We meet most months before the regular chapter meeting. Our next meeting will be at 11:00AM on April 12, 2014, and we'd love to exchange ideas and experiences with you! For venue or other information, please join our Facebook group (Reflective Practice SIG Gwangju-Jeonnam) or you can contact either Jocelyn Wright (Email: jocelynmnu@yahoo.com) or Tyson Vieira (Email: tyson.vieira@att.net).
