BOOKLIST

The following publications of interest were seen recently on the shelves in some of Seoul's major bookstores. This list represents the beginning of what we hope will become a bibliography of materials related to the teaching of English which are available in Korea. Help us add to the list by exploring the bookstores in your city and reporting the best of what you find to any member of the Publications Committee (in writing, please, lest we forget). Additions to the Booklist will be published in the Newsletter as we receive them. (We cannot reprint the entire list in every issue of the Newsletter, so what should we do with it as it continues to grow? Please give us your suggestions.) Incidentally, members of the Association who are new to Korea and would like to know where bookstores and libraries in Seoul are located should feel free to get in touch with Dwight Strawn (392-3785, evenings only) or any member of the Coordinating Committee or Publications Committee. Guided tours can also be arranged for members who are interested.

A History of English Language Teaching

Howatt's book is a welcome addition to the sparse shelf of books about the history of language teaching. Among previous works, by Kelly's history (1969) is perhaps the most outstanding; it has become a standard reference and is remarkable for its wealth of detail and extensive bibliography. Mackey's (1965) text on methods analysis includes brief descriptions of major methods but does not give much historical background (in fairness, this was not Mackey's main purpose). The collection of texts edited by Hesse (1975) brings together a number of important passages from primary sources but is not a full-fledged historical analysis. And Darian's (1972) history is unsatisfying for readers interested in a broader perspective because it focuses primarily upon the American tradition of English language teaching. The new book by Howatt fills many of the gaps left by earlier works. One finds here, for example, the connecting narrative and development of ideas missing in Mackey and Hesse, a chronological treatment of trends and themes rather than the topical organization found in Kelly, and attention to the contributions of many British and European scholars not included in Darian. Moreover, the book is written in a fresh and compelling style which makes it interesting and easy to read.

Some of the early chapters relate to the whole field of English language teaching including English as a native language, but the main subject is English as a foreign or second language. Parts One and Two consist of ten chapters describing major developments before the nineteenth century. Part Three describes the emergence of the grammar-translation method, its establishment as the prevailing teaching method of the nineteenth century, and various alternatives proposed by reformers in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Part Four surveys events from 1900 to the present and includes valuable biographical essays detailing the contributions of Harold E. Palmer, Michael West and A.S. Hornby. There is also a chronology of major events in the field, a section of biographical sketches and an English translation of Vietor's influential pamphlet from 1886 "Der Sprachunterricht muss umkehren!" (Language teaching must start afresh!).

This book is an excellent introduction to the history of English language teaching and is highly recommended for experienced teachers as well as those who are new to the field.

Trading Tall Tales

by Christine S. Alvarado
University of Panama in Chiriqui

In conversation classes, getting students to listen to each other can be as much of a problem as getting them to speak. Trading Tall Tales helps students do both, and more:

Students use their imagination, the more the better.

Students practice an important function of language—giving an excuse.

Students organize and present oral discourse, and they listen to and discuss that of others.

Students work enthusiastically, unaware that they are practicing skills. The object of the activity, for them at least, is to entertain and be entertained. In fact, it is the major advantage of this technique that students unconsciously refine listening and speaking skills in real communication as they participate in an enjoyable activity.

The technique is simple. Students are placed in groups of four, and each student is given a situation card with pertinent information. For this activity, each card will describe a situation in which an imaginary person missed an important event at which attendance was necessary.

Each student in the group takes the role of the person and is given ten minutes to make up an excuse that will last from two to three minutes when presented. The excuse should be completely unbelievable, even outlandish. Nevertheless, it must be logically organized and understandable. Most important, the topic and language used to explain it must be appropriate for both the imaginary situation and the classroom.

When the ten minutes are up, all students present their excuses to the other members of their group. Here students try to match the presentation to the content of the excuse in order to be as effective as possible. When all members in the group have finished, the group as a whole discusses and selects the best excuse on the basis of both content and presentation.

Finally, the author of the excuse selected in each group presents it to the entire class. Then the class compares them all and decides who told the tallest tale, and did it the most convincingly.

I have heard a lot of tales, from banana peels to spaceships, as excuses for missing a wedding, a graduation, or whatever the event. But I have also seen amused students work very hard in class without even realizing it—and that is no tall tale.
